Holy Water

Used for baptizing, and to recall it; symbolizing exterior and interior purity; some is blessed in solemn ritual during the Easter Vigil; in fonts (like miniature baptisteries)at church doorways and in homes, for use coming and going; sometimes sprinkled on individuals/assemblies/objects as part of a blessing; part of the revised penitential rite. (The asperges is the old Latin name used for the ceremony of sprinkling with holy water at Mass, from the first words of the psalm used in the rite, "You will sprinkle me with hyssop..." The asperges is replaced in the Easter Season by the hymn "Vidi Aquam," "I Beheld Water," from Ezekiel 47:1-12)

Rector

Popularly, a pastor: the chief clergyman of a parish (Hence, "rectory" as a parish's office building/ pastor's residence); common with the Episcopal church. Technically, the head of a religious community of men or of an educational institution. Canonically, the priest in charge of a church that is not (only) parochial (for example, a cathedral).

Celebret (Latin: Let him celebrate.)

A document stating that a person is a priest in good standing and requesting that he be permitted to celebrate the Eucharistic; requiring the signature of his bishop (or Superior)

Holy Oils

Used in the sacraments which impart a =-0=-0 character (Baptism, Confirmation, and Holy Orders), in the Sacrament of Healing (Anointing of the Sick), and in the blessing of various objects. In 1970 it allowed that, if necessary, holy oils may be from any plant, not only from olives. The blessing of oils has traditionally been done on Holy Thursdays by a bishop at a cathedral. The supply distributed to local churches is kept in the ambry, and the unused portion, a year later, burned in the sanctuary lamp.

Chrism(S. C., Sacrum Chrisma)

Used in Baptism, Confirmation, and Holy Orders, as well as blessing tower bells and baptismal water and for consecrating churches, altars, chalices, and patents. Only Chrism among the holy oils includes balsam, or balm, giving it an unmistakable fragrance, alluding to Paul's "odor of life" or "aroma of holiness" metaphor in the 2 Corinthians 2:15-16.

Oil of Catechumens (O.C., Oleum Catechumenorum)

Also known as the oil of the Saints (O.S., Oleum Sanctorum), it's used during the prayer of ecorism and anointing when a catechumen is initiated, whence the name.

Oil of the Sick

Used in the Anointing of the Sick
