Reflection:

Who do you say that I am?”

And, of course, this is the main point, isn't it? We're all sitting here. It doesn't matter what Herod did or said to John the Baptist, or how he treated Jesus. None of this matters.

Because we all say to each other, “Yes, well, in his time this person did this and this person did that, and Peter did this and someone else did that,” but we're not answering the question that Jesus is asking.

He's saying, “Who do you say that I am?”

You. Not two centuries ago. Not even a hundred years ago. Not all the theologians and everybody else that we admire: St Augustine and St Thomas Aquinas and all these wonderful people. It doesn't matter what they said of Jesus. Because Jesus, today, here and now, says the same thing to us, “But who do you say that I am?”
