Reflection:

What would have happened if Jesus had not been resurrected? That there would be no Christians in the world, that Christianity would not exist, that today in the whole earth more than two billion two hundred thousand Christians would not be celebrating the Eucharist, nor its resurrection. "If death had been superior to Jesus, everything would have ended. Jesus would have been forgotten. Of his life, his gospel, his death, there would have been nothing but a bitter taste of utopia, naivety or failure".

That's how important the resurrection of Jesus is. We must see Jesus in his complete reality, and never separately. His life, death and resurrection form an indivisible unit. If Jesus died as he died it was because he lived the way he lived, and if he rose again, it was because he lived and died as he did, he lived and died preaching the gospel of love, of love for God, for others and for oneself. That is why his Father God raised him up on the third day. "Why do you search among the dead live? Not here. He is risen".

Jesus has changed the course of humanity. It has introduced into all of us something that was not in our natural genetic code. As God is and can, he has achieved what no scientist, no inventor, no human being can ever achieve. It has been able to extend our life beyond death, for all eternity and a happy eternity. But not the same life we live on earth, a life always limited and threatened by bad news and bad deeds. That life that we all yearn to live has conquered us, a life where we will be able to enjoy various fullness: that of love, that of beauty, that of good, that of justice, that of partying ... without any mixture of heartbreak, ugliness, evils, injustices, boredom. A life full of life and happiness.
