Reflection:

There is an important lesson here. God escorts whoever escorts. God enables whoever enables. A quick glance around a typical congregation reveals that God has not chosen the best or the smartest. Most of God's work is done by ordinary people who are distinguished only by one characteristic - they have given their hearts to God. This encourages us. It should also warn us not to judge someone else's ability. The star athlete and the smartest student in the class may think too much of himself to accomplish the heavenly good. The person who seems to have the least to offer may be the person God chooses to transform the world. God escorts whoever escorts.

We wonder what Jesus was thinking when he chose this very ordinary group of disciples. Despite this, the growth of the church during the first century shows that Jesus chose well - or that he has enabled them well. These disciples will do great things, not because they are great, but because the one who empowered them is great.
